

Cookies Policy

Last updated: November 5, 2025

We use cookies and similar tech to make your experience on Dark Weather smooth and helpful. Here's the rundown on what cookies are and how we use them.

What's a Cookie?

Cookies are tiny text files that are saved on your device while visiting our site. Think of them as little helpers that remember stuff, like remembering your device the next time you log in, or remembering your app preferences, so you don't have to start from scratch every time.

How We Use Cookies

We utilize cookies to:

Keep Things Running: Log you in, remember your device, and make sure our site works properly.

Make It Yours: Remember your settings, like your app appearance and chart preferences.

Learn and Improve: Figure out how you use our site so we can make it better.

Types of Cookies We Use

Essential Cookies: These are the non-negotiables. They handle basics like logging in and keeping our site secure. Without them, things would break, so they're always on. You can still manage them through your browser if you want.

Personalization Cookies: These help us see how you use our site—like which pages you hit most—and remember your preferences. They let us tweak things to improve your experience. You can turn these off in your browser settings if they're not your thing.

Managing Preferences

You're in charge! You can tweak your browser settings to block or delete cookies anytime. Just a heads-up: if you nix the essential ones, you will not be able to login to the app and various other issues would arise with your experience with us online. Check your browser's help section for the how-to.

For more on how we handle your data, peek at our Privacy Policy (available at darkweather.com/privacy). Got questions? Send us a message at contact@darkweather.com.

Changes to the Cookie Policy

We may update this Cookie Policy to reflect changes in our practices from time to time. When we update it, we will revise the “Last updated” entry above and post the new Cookie Policy. We may communicate any changes with you from time to time in a manner we determine.